

Tanzanian Officials boost skills in public works project management

May 10, 2024

A two-week capacity building programme focused on project and risk management in public works has begun for Tanzanian officials at the National Centre for Good Governance (NCGG) in Mussoorie.

The programme, running from May 6th to 17th 2024, is being delivered by the NCGG in partnership with India's Ministry of External Affairs (MEA). 39 participants from Tanzania's public sector are attending, representing various organisations including the National Roads Agency, Ministry of Energy, and the Tanzania Railway Corporation.

The NCGG, an Indian government agency, aims to share best practices and knowledge in governance. This programme will provide insights into how India plans and executes public works projects, while also fostering closer ties between the two nations.

Officials will gain expertise in areas like project selection, risk management, and public-private partnerships. The programme also includes visits to key infrastructure projects in India, such as dams, highways, and the Delhi Metro.

Speaking at the opening ceremony, Shri V. Srinivas, Director General of the NCGG, highlighted the importance of collaboration and knowledge exchange. He emphasised the role of technology in improving governance and public service delivery.

Mr. George Nsavike Ndatta, Head of the Tanzanian delegation, expressed gratitude for the opportunity and believes the programme will empower participants to design and implement effective projects that benefit Tanzania's development.

The NCGG has a history of delivering training programmes to civil servants from across the globe. This is the latest initiative in their ongoing commitment to international cooperation and capacity building.
