

APM Launches New Project Management Qualification

September 3, 2024

The Association for Project Management (APM) has announced the launch of its new Project Management Qualification. This updated qualification is designed to support project professionals at all levels and offers a range of benefits.

The new qualification features a revised exam format with a mix of question types to assess candidates' knowledge and understanding. It is aligned with the latest industry standards and provides a comprehensive overview of project management principles and practices.

Commenting on the launch, Jackie Martin, APM's Director of Education and Life-Long Learning, said: "Our new Project Management Qualification is the result of listening to the profession and experts and bringing what we heard together to create a great new qualification.

"We've built it from the ground up, keeping what people loved – like the broad syllabus coverage – and making changes where they helped bring new levels of accessibility or a better experience. This includes our new exam format that's designed to test candidate's knowledge in a variety of ways.

"Thank you to everyone who supported the development of our qualification, including the 300 people who sat our largest ever pilot exam last year."

Key features of the new qualification:

- Updated exam format: Includes a variety of question types to assess candidates' knowledge and understanding.

- Comprehensive syllabus: Covers a wide range of project management topics, including planning, execution, monitoring, and control.
- Level 7 qualification: Equivalent to an Advanced Higher or a Higher National Certificate.
- New Learner Study Pack: Provides candidates with essential study materials and resources.

APM's Accredited Training Providers offer training courses for the new qualification. Candidates can also choose to self-study.

The launch of the new Project Management Qualification marks a significant milestone for APM and demonstrates its commitment to providing high-quality professional development opportunities for project professionals.
